OPERA CLUB

The August meeting of the Four Seasons Opera Club will be on Friday, Aug. 9 at 6 pm in The Lodge Theater. We will stream Thaïs by Jules Massenet.

The recording is from Jan. 8, 2009, at the Metropolitan Opera featuring Renée Fleming in the title role and Thomas Hampson as Athanaël in a "traditional" staging.

Thaïs was first performed in March 16, 1894, at the Opéra Comique in Paris. Thaïs was the consort of Ptolemy, who traveled with Alexander the Great on his military campaigns. It is proposed that she was Alexander's lover as well and that she chided Alexander to burn Persepolis. She later became a courtesan in Alexandria who, in a mid-life crisis, seeks to renew her relationship with God. When a Cenobitic monk comes to convert her, he finds that she had already converted. He guides her to a convent where she attains sainthood.

Massenet's opera focuses on conversion. The story begins with her, a devotee of Venus and sensual love. The monk Athanaël, who knew her as a youth, vows to claim her for God. He challenges her to repent at a party thrown by her current lover. She publicly rejects the challenge, but later, alone in her home, she sings the

Renée Fleming as Thaïs

"Mirror Aria" in which she pleads Venus for eternal beauty. Athanaël visits, she agrees to his challenge, and we hear the famous "Méditation" during which her conversion takes place. It is a stunningly beautiful violin solo performed by the concert master standing spot-lit in the orchestra pit. The profundity of this passage is akin to the ringing of bells in Mass – signaling the mystery of transubstantiation. In the morning they depart to the convent. Athanaël leaves Thaïs in the care of the nuns and returns to his cenobium, but is troubled with internal unrest. He realizes that he is in love and returns to the convent to plead with Thaïs to renounce God and resume her devotion to Venus and to himself. But Thaïs' sainthood is complete; she dies in grace and ascends to heaven.

This is the third club presentation featuring Renée Fleming as a woman who achieves redemption through her own dignity or personal conversion. The first was as the water nymph Rusalka. The second was last month's Violetta in La Traviata. And now Thaïs. Next month we will visit with Mimi in Puccini's La Bohème. ~ Harvey Toyama, yukito@yukito.net, (951) 524-3765
